On cover:

Hey, it’s me, Lucas. My mom and dad took me to NSTAR’s Walk for Boston Children’s Hospital last year—boy was that fun. Check out my tshirt—yep, I was born with half a heart. Well, not quite half, it’s something called hypoplastic left heart syndrome. Docs say the left side of my heart is underdeveloped, making the right side work harder. Read more about me on page 2.

What does the future look like for kids with congenital heart defects? Pretty amazing with help from Boston Children's. Get a load of 7-year-old Noah, above. He loves playing baseball, is a whiz at math, and tracks the stats of his favorite teams—even has his own fantasy hockey team. Naturally, he's the general manager, checking progress each morning before school. But before Noah was born, his parents Dan and Shoshana Farb faced uncertainty when they learned their son had a heart defect. Boston Children's surgeons saved his life, and his parents will be forever grateful he can lead a life without limitations. They recently made a leadership gift to the hospital's Heart Center. "We feel very lucky," Shoshana says. Dan added, "We owe a huge debt to the hospital. If we can be at all helpful, we feel an obligation to do that."

Sleepless nights, inconsolable crying—there's a lot to expect when you're expecting.

A congenital heart defect shouldn't be one of those things.

At other hospitals, parents are offered counseling. At Boston Children's, our work begins.

In 2001, a Boston Children's team performed the world's first successful fetal cardiac intervention. Today, the program has grown to the largest, most respected of its kind. Early diagnosis means better treatment—a lifeline to the nearly 40,000 babies born each year with a heart defect, some whose parents are told to terminate their pregnancy. That was Bill and Becky McGowan's experience at their local hospital.

"We were terrified and didn't know what to expect," Becky says. "It wasn't until we got to Boston Children's Hospital that we felt we were in the right hands. We're one of the luckiest families in the world because we live an hour away from the greatest hospital on the planet."

They named their unborn son Lucas, which means bringer of light. "And that's what we needed," Becky says.

Because Lucas was diagnosed early, Boston Children's surgeons knew what to expect, greeted Lucas upon his arrival, and got to work—repairing his heart defect, an underdeveloped left ventricle. For the next generation of babies born with hypoplastic left heart syndrome, Boston Children's cardiologists are exploring an innovative treatment: marshaling the body's natural capacity to heal, encouraging undersized ventricles to grow to give the child a fully functioning heart. That pursuit of a better way is endless at Boston Children's—and it's a pursuit made possible by philanthropy.

The Heart Center at Boston Children's Hospital has grown to become the largest, most respected pediatric cardiovascular program in the world, with a history of innovation:

1938

World's first successful surgery to correct a congenital cardiovascular defect.

1986

Inception of heart transplant program.

1990

First pediatric non-surgical repair of a cardiac arrhythmia. The technique? Using radio waves through a catheter.

1999

FDA approves CardioSEAL, a minimally invasive device developed at Boston Children's to repair holes in the heart.

2001

World's first successful in utero repair of a heart defect.

2002

First robot-assisted cardiac surgery at a pediatric center.

150 fetal heart surgeries in total, 6,000 adult cardiac patients—the largest adult congenital heart program in the world.

The lights of Las Vegas—fueled by the generosity of Gary Loveman, Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer of Caesars Entertainment—are bright enough to shine on a little girl in Revere, Mass. Loveman, a Boston Children's board member, harnessed the star power of Celine Dion to create Play Without Pain, a concert benefiting sickle cell research and kids like Jayda, at right, who suffer from the disease. The January 15 concert raised more than $1 million. "As a parent, I've been touched by the stories that were shared with me about the impact sickle cell anemia has on millions of children around the world," said Dion. "I wanted to help. No child should have to live a life filled with pain." Loveman's motivation for pulling off the epic event? Knowing that Boston Children's researchers are within reach of a cure.

Matthew Heeney, MD,
Stuart H. Orkin, MD,
Gary Loveman, Celine Dion,
Gary Fleisher, MD, and David A. Williams, MD.

The birth of twins, Jayda and Jason, spelled joy for their parents Grace and John Bbosa.

But "frequent flier" status in the emergency room soon became the norm. Jayda's diagnosis: sickle cell disease.

For many, it's a misunderstood disease ...we know it, but we don't know it. One in ten African Americans carry the genetic trait for the condition, in which malformed, sickle-shaped blood cells cause excruciating pain, organ failure and early death. The average lifespan if you're "lucky" enough to be living in the US? 46 years.

For Jayda, the swelling in her hands and feet was so painful, she couldn't put pressure on her legs to walk.

"It was very sad as a mother," says Grace. "You don't know what to do. You do the best you can."

But now Boston Children's researchers are on track to develop a cure for sickle cell in two years. Stuart H. Orkin, MD, has found a gene called BCL11A that can switch off the protein responsible for sickle cell. With that knowledge, researchers are working to find a drug that will eliminate the disease's symptoms. And on a parallel track, Orkin's colleague David A. Williams, MD, is exploring gene therapy to permanently cure sickle cell disease. He's already cured a previously untreatable immune deficiency disease through gene therapy. Sickle cell is next. And he's got families like the Bbosas pulling for him.

"I pray for a cure every single night. Jayda kneels down and prays. We are believers," Grace says. "They're going to find a cure. And when they have a cure, we'll be the first in line."

Jayda is treated with a drug once used for leukemia patients—it was Boston Children's doctors who discovered its effectiveness combating sickle cell. Today Jayda's in third grade, loves to sing and dance, and is thriving in school.

At age 7, Justin Doo had life-saving neurosurgery—a month later, he and his siblings were digging through their playroom for toys to sell to help other kids. It was the inspiration behind the family's first yard sale benefiting the hospital. "Someone bought a $3 water bottle for $100; I got teary-eyed," Justin's mom Lisa says. Since 2007, they've hosted a yard sale rain or shine—and in 2012 there was more rain than shine. The Doos sold tshirts and water bottles, offered concessions, hosted a basketball tournament, and even brought in a dunk tank—Justin's dad Derek is the lucky guy above. "I think when you experience something life-changing it makes you appreciate the things around you," Lisa says. "My kids were so young when this happened, we've made giving back to Children's a way of life. We were so blessed to have the doctors available to us. So we want to give back any way we can."

A selfless calling—to become a medical missionary—led neurosurgeon Ben Warf, MD, to life-saving discoveries for children in Africa, and to a "genius grant" that recognizes and fuels that work.

After several short medical missions to Kenya, in early 2000, Warf, his wife, and six children moved to Uganda. There, he helped to open a hospital specializing in neurosurgery. With few sub-specialists, the demand was great—and so was the need for out-of-the-box thinking. For years, neurosurgeons treated hydrocephalus, water on the brain, with a drainage tube called a shunt. But shunts are imperfect, requiring multiple operations over time. In Uganda that expensive follow-up care just wouldn't be possible.

Warf began testing a series of techniques and found a revolutionary, low-cost approach: cauterizing brain tissues to slow the production of fluid, then making small openings in the base of the brain to allow fluid to drain. This alternative reduced the need for shunts by about two-thirds, and has now become the standard of care at Boston Children's Hospital, where Warf directs the Neonatal and Congenital Anomaly Neurosurgery Program.

Now with support from a 2012 MacArthur Foundation "genius grant," Warf is tackling the causes of hydrocephalus, with hopes to one day prevent the condition. Until then, his training program for neurosurgeons throughout Africa, Asia, and the Middle East means access, and outcomes, are better than ever for kids in need.

A red Cape Cod in Wellesley was a hub of activity, and at its core: Tommy Fuss.

The kid who saved up his first communion money to buy a drum set. The one who resurrected his high school's bowling club. The one whose pack of friends filled the house for movie marathons, with pizza or the famous Tom Burger always on the menu—and parents Dan and RoseMary always nearby.

Tommy lived life in a big way. So no one could have predicted that he'd take his own life his senior year of high school.

The signs were unclear, at best, disguised as a typical teenager's reach for independence. Less time with mom and dad, more time in his room. Tommy had just started seeing a child psychiatrist.

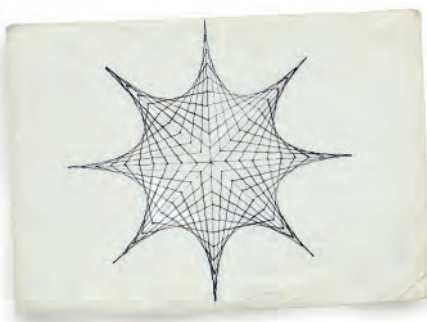

"Tommy didn't give us enough time," RoseMary says. "I often think if he had been given a diagnosis of cancer, we wouldn't have left one stone unturned. But we're finished blaming ourselves. There isn't a day that goes by that we don't celebrate what we had, and try to prevent this from happening to anyone else."

With better understanding, treatments, and one day, cures for mental illness as a goal, the Fuss family made a gift that helped launch the hospital's Developmental Neuropsychiatry Program. The research group and its clinic harness the expertise of leaders in psychology, genetics, genomics, bioinformatics, neuroimaging and pharmacology.

Today, researchers are studying at-risk children and conducting state-of-the-art brain wave analysis to understand the underpinnings of mental illness. That information translates to the clinic where experts are developing better tools for psychological evaluation, and a companion questionnaire for parents who may see, but not understand, warning signs.

"I live with the hope of understanding and the dream of curing mental illness," RoseMary says.

Tommy created this star using a mechanical pencil and graph paper while a student at Belmont Hill. His parents have embraced the drawing, seeing the overlapping lines, and the complicated designs they form, symbolic of the complexity of mental illness—and their commitment to cure it.

John Hancock Financial shares our commitment to ensuring underserved children grow up safe and healthy. Since 2007, John Hancock has provided Boston Marathon® waivers to our marathon team, helping us raise $1.5 million since 2007. And at the holidays, staff lead an annual giving drive, collecting money, educational toys and books to make the holidays brighter for families at the Primary Care Center.

How does poverty reach deep into the halls of an elite “ivory tower” medical institution?

It’s welcomed through the front door at Boston Children’s, with our commitment to serving the local community—many struggling financially, but rich in resolve.

Our Primary Care Center treats more than 13,000 children and families of Boston’s urban communities— primarily Dorchester, Roxbury and Mission Hill. But because so many of our patients live in poverty, surrounded by violence, treatment isn’t just about well visits. The Primary Care Center is a “medical home” to families, caring for physical, mental and emotional needs here at Boston Children’s, and beyond our walls.

A “medical home” comes to life in the faces of social workers, psychologists, financial counselors, nurses and doctors. Many are bilingual. And the services offered are broad, from traditional care, to programs that promote literacy, prevent obesity, encourage success in school, provide job training and so much more. Often it’s about connections: to reliable transportation, child care, jobs and mental health resources.

“Everyone thinks I’m an exception— that I’ve beaten the odds,” one single mom, a college graduate and master’s degree candidate, shares. “But I had extraordinary help. If everyone could have help, achievement like mine could be the norm.”

Yadriel is a primary care patient, and his mom Maria Colon, 19, of Roxbury, is part of our Young Parents Program. YPP serves 250 teen moms, 75 young dads, and 300 babies a year. “Teens who get pregnant face many health risks,” Primary Care Director Joanne Cox says. “They often lack support networks and parenting knowledge. They need a lot of support, and they need somebody to care about them. We do that.”

The first Boston Investment Conference drew 600 attendees November 8 despite a Nor'easter. Josh Gold and Trust board member Matthew Sidman (left) led an all-star committee raising $1.3 million for hospital research. The main draw? Stellar speakers including (right) Andrew Bary, Richard Perry, Jonathan Jacobson, and Seth Klarman, with patient guest Avery.

run

Jeff Hintlian, Jill Anzalone, Molly Crowley and Danielle Longhitano were among the 201 runners on our Miles for Miracles Boston Marathon team battling the heat April 16—temperatures reached the low 90s.

Don Criniti, Steve Hoberman, Steve Parker, Deb Desantis (L to R) of Fidelity hopped on spin bikes for Boston Children's indoor-relay style Spin fundraiser March 4.

Families like the Egans, left, join NSTAR's Walk for Boston Children's Hospital each June to say thank you for great care. This event is made possible by NSTAR's generosity and the leadership of its president and CEO, Tom May

Texas Hold 'Em co-chairs (L to R) David Fialkow, Brad Gerstner, Tony DiNovi and Ben Fischman with emcee and World Series of Poker Pro, Annie Duke. The crew rallied around the tables again to benefit Boston Children's.

Across New England and around the globe, people are rolling up their sleeves to help our patients. Here are just a few of the corporate initiatives and community events that were organized to benefit the hospital.

Grateful for the care she's received since birth, Sabrina Kelley and her family organize Sabrina's Shootout each year to benefit the hospital's cystic fibrosis program. Fifteen giant inflatables, a hole-in-one putting green and a mechanical bull—no small potatoes—drew 550 attendees in 2012. In 17 years, the Norwell family has raised more than $380,000.

Riders revved their motors for the annual Heather Lynne Siebert Ride, where 100+ riders raised more than $8,000 to benefit the hospital. The 3.5 hour journey started at the Laconia Harley Davidson in Meredith, NH.

Heart transplant patient Grace Kobold (center) bravely shared her story during Children's Hospital League's annual gala. She was joined by her cousins, and the Big Apple Clown Care Unit—sponsored by the League—got in on the act, too!

Eat, drink, and give back to Boston Children's—it's what Legal Sea Foods encourages with its gift card program, coming up on its 20th anniversary. Purchase a gift "cod" between Thanksgiving and New Year's, and Legal's donates a portion of the proceeds to support hospital research—in 2012, that was $70,000.

IHOP General Manager Alan Wright knows there's meaning behind the free meal his company offers on National Pancake Day in exchange for donations benefiting the hospital. Wright's sister Jasmine received a life-saving bone marrow transplant from the hospital 11 years ago, and since then, his family's been forever grateful. In 2012, National Pancake Day raised $36,000 for the hospital.

Yoga Reaches Out, a day-long yoga experience at Gillette Stadium, has raised $325,000 since the event's inception. The founder, Sarah Gardner, sees it as a win-win: yoga enthusiasts do what they love and can pay it forward.

Last April, shoe designer Stuart Weitzman's New York showroom looked more like a science lab for Shoe + Tell, an evening of socializing and science with Boston Children's world-renowned researchers. Hands-on "innovation stations" allowed guests to explore breakthroughs in cancer, stem cells, robotics, and more. Jane and Stuart Weitzman are longtime hospital advocates, Jane (second from left, with our researchers) serves on our Trust Board.

Panera Bread turned lemons into lemonade—and a sweet donation to the hospital—through campaigns such as Lemon-Aid for Kids, an Easter egg cookie sale, and more. In total, Panera Bread raised more than $100,000 for Boston Children's Hospital.

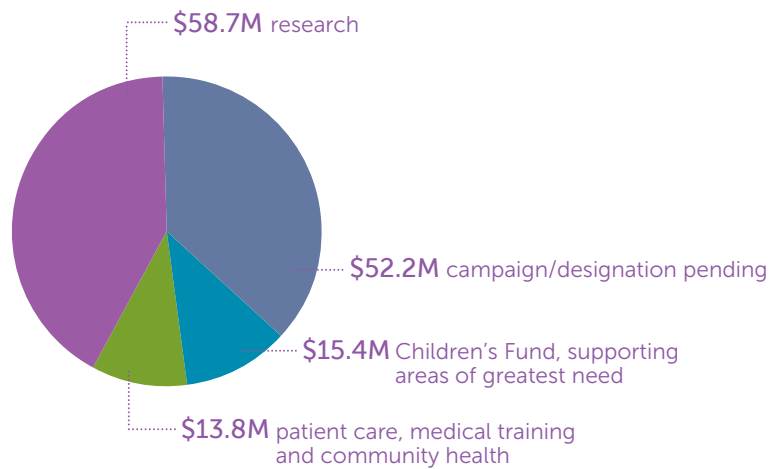

Brandeis University, Emmanuel College, UMASS Boston, UMASS Dartmouth and Wentworth Institute of Technology students raised $56,789 through Dance Marathon. This multi-hour event held at campuses across the country includes dancing, music and games with participants collecting pledges for hours danced—all for the kids.

use of funds 2012

In 2012, 67,351 people here, there and everywhere, gave 105,413 gifts totaling $140 million.

From kid philanthropists—to blue chip companies. From world leaders in fashion and finance—to the grateful family right down the road. This listing reflects the diverse members of Boston Children's community of supporters—thank you for your generosity.

Thank you

We gratefully recognize you and others who generously donated $1,000 or more in outright gifts of cash, securities and property in calendar year 2012. Thank you for sharing your extraordinary gifts with the children we serve.

Signature Society: Named Endowed Funds

Placing your name, or that of a loved one, on an endowed fund at Boston Children's endorses what matters most to you. The following have joined our Signature Society—honoring someone or something important in their life—by creating a named endowed fund.

Boston Children's Hospital/ Harvard Medical School Professorships

The highest academic honor bestowed on faculty, these endowed professorships support Boston Children's scientists and clinicians. Income from professorship funds sustains vital research, clinical care and training, and represents a lasting partnership between benefactors and chair incumbents.

New for 2012

Denise and David Bunning Professorship in Allergy and Immunology

Established through the generosity of the Sunshine Charitable Foundation and the Children's Hospital Pediatrics Associates for the recruitment and support of a world-class scientist to further research and care for children with food allergies.

Boston Children's Hospital Chairs

The highest clinical and/or research honor bestowed on our leading physicians and scientists. Income from these chairs helps advance the work of the chair incumbents and their departments and divisions. By endowing chairs, benefactors are linked to the world-changing pursuits of the doctors they support.

New for 2012

Center for Blood Research Chair

Established by an anonymous donor to support a member of the faculty in the Program for Cellular and Molecular Medicine.

Immune Disease Institute Chair

Established by the Children's Hospital Pediatrics Associates to support a member of the faculty in the Program for Cellular and Molecular Medicine.

Trevor McGill Chair

Established by the CHMC Otolaryngologic Foundation to support the work of the fellowship program director in pediatric otolaryngology.

A spark for life-saving ideas

The hospital's novel Venture Philanthropy Network (VPN), pooling the resources of 21 member families, helps get innovative, life-saving ideas to patients sooner using the same rigor found in the investment world. It's that rigor that impressed Trust board member Jonathan Lavine, managing partner and chief investment officer of Sankaty Advisors, and his wife, Jeannie, inspiring them to make a $5 million challenge gift. New or increased gifts to the VPN would be matched, fast-tracking a concept's journey from lab to bedside. It's funding that fills a critical gap for researchers at just the right moment. "There is no greater work than saving children's lives and no greater institution than Boston Children's," Lavine says. "We know this investment will promote research discoveries and we're excited by where the findings will take us."

A family searches for cures

Twelve-year-old AJ's medical condition leaves many unanswered questions—questions his parents Sarah and Patrick Foye hope Boston Children's researchers will help answer. AJ has centronuclear myopathy, a rare muscle disease that leaves him so weak he can't carry his schoolbooks, or walk long distances. But through genome sequencing, researchers pinpointed the exact gene that's causing AJ's condition. With that knowledge, drugs can be screened to combat this defect. Research offers hope: it's why the Foyes ask for donations to the hospital through their Christmas card mailing, host fundraising events, and recently named Boston Children's the beneficiary of a retirement account, ensuring funding well into the future.

Circles of Leadership

Children's Circles of Leadership is a society recognizing individuals who annually give $1,000 or more to Boston Children's Hospital. Donors who make gifts to the hospital in their will, trust, life insurance policy, retirement plan, or life-income gifts are welcomed into Children's Legacy Circle.

Circle of Care

The top level of philanthropy among Children's Circles of Leadership is Circle of Care. Individuals and family foundations who make annual gifts of $10,000 or more are welcomed into Circle of Care. Donors also become members of an honorary society of 25 participating children's hospitals in the United States and Canada.

Stem cells to cures challenge

One breakthrough stands between our researchers and a new approach to curing leukemia, lymphoma and life-threatening blood disorders: turning stem cells into blood-forming cells to replace damaged ones, opening the door to cures for countless other diseases. But with limited federal funding, Anita and Josh Bekenstein and Diana and Doug Berthiaume made a challenge grant to encourage new or increased gifts to the program. Inspired by their generosity, and awed by the promise of cures, the following families rose to the challenge: Barnes, Corkins, Gordons, Grousbecks, Krafts, Pappendicks, Shapiros, Slifkas and Stanskys, along with the Harp Helú Foundation. The group surpassed the goal, raising millions to support this effort. Equipped with funding, researchers are moving toward cures for children and adults.

Building your legacy

The O'Donnell family legacy at Boston Children's is an enduring one. Joe O'Donnell played an important role in helping create Boston Children's Hospital Trust, serves on its board, and has spent countless hours from Beacon Hill to Capitol Hill advocating for the most vulnerable children. To help others build their own legacy, O'Donnell, his wife, Kathy, and daughters Kate and Casey made a unique $1 million challenge gift. Donors who included the hospital in their will or estate plans and made a new or increased leadership gift to the hospital would have their gift matched by the family. The result? Fifty-two new legacy donors and nearly $10 million to meet the hospital's needs today—and in the future. O'Donnell, above right, with Hospital Board Chairman Stephen Karp.

Honoring Dana

Born with a congenital anomaly with other complications, Dana Mercauto was a life-long patient. At age 23, she needed even more tests, and doctors discovered cancer was attacking Dana's body. After four months at Boston Children's, doctors ran out of options. Dana's wish was to be home with family in Somerville, where she passed away. Boston Children's was a second home to the Mercautos—it's why her mom, Carol, makes donations whenever she can. "You're all angels without wings," Carol says. "You cared for Dana the way I would care for her. You need a red carpet in the lobby to show the royalty with which every patient is treated."

Global good health

Children with disabilities throughout Mexico count on Fundación Teletón for care through its 21 rehabilitation centers. With growing numbers of children battling cancer, Teletón USA is opening a special hospital: Hospital Infantil Teletón de Oncología (HITO), and looked to Boston Children's for help. In an innovative partnership made possible by Teletón USA's generosity, we've created a global fellowship program. HITO oncology fellows will be on-site at Boston Children's, immersed in our work, and our clinicians will travel to Mexico, gaining deeper insights into caring for a different population. A shared goal: improving global health through family-centered care, novel treatments, cures and one day prevention of cancer. Teletón USA's generosity is recognized with a plaque on our hematology/oncology unit.

A meaningful marathon

Cheryl Flynn runs the Boston Marathon® for the hospital's Miles for Miracles team in gratitude for her smart, funny and strong-willed son, Matthew, above. But five years ago, his future was far from certain. Matthew and his twin brother, James, were born premature at 26 weeks. James passed away soon after birth, while Matthew, weighing just over a pound, continued to fight. Matthew suffered from organ failure, couldn't breathe on his own, and had a hole in his bowel—his biggest challenge. Matthew arrived at our NICU in the middle of the night for a complicated surgery, and slowly began to heal: growing, gaining weight, and breathing on his own. "As Matthew began to thrive, we finally could take in all that was happening in the NICU—all of the lives that these nurses and doctors were changing," Cheryl says. "Running 26 miles and raising $5,000 is only a small start to express the gratitude and appreciation we feel."

Corporate values brought to life

Childhood obesity has nearly tripled in the past 30 years. There are many causes—but sadly, few proven strategies to combat this costly epidemic. With New Balance Foundation's generous $8 million gift, Boston Children's established The New Balance Foundation Obesity Prevention Center to do just that. The Center is developing a wide range of care and community outreach initiatives, all shaped by findings from our leading researchers. Managing Trustee of the New Balance Foundation, Anne Davis (above with Center director David Ludwig, MD, PhD), is helping us lead the way. "We're thrilled to partner with Boston Children's to provide children and families the tools they need to lead more active, healthy lives."

It's all fun(draising) and games

There are lots of ways to raise money—and Extra Life shows that playing games can be one of them. This 24-hour game marathon, developed by Children's Miracle Network Hospitals, encourages gamers to collect pledges per hour played, all to benefit associated children's hospitals. Led by Rick Heaton of Turbine, a subsidiary of Warner Bros. that develops online games, local gamers raised $92,283. Heaton alone raised $18,488.71, becoming the event's top fundraiser nationwide. How'd he do it? After 18 years with his beloved beard, he agreed to shave it if he surpassed $15,000.

Champions for Children's

This annual sports-themed dinner and auction—backed by the Boston Bruins, Boston Celtics, New England Patriots, Boston Red Sox and New England Revolution—raised more than $3.2 million for the hospital with tremendous leadership from event chairs Ben Butcher and Bryan Koop. New England Patriots player Zoltan Mesko was recognized with a Champion Award for his contributions to Boston Children's and the community.

Party with a purpose

Abigail Cohen's friends are runners. And over the years, a few have joined the hospital's marathon team, agreeing to raise money to run the Boston Marathon*. A worthy goal—but not for Abigail. "I'm lucky to run a mile at the gym, if I get there," Abigail says. But giving back matters, so when her 30th birthday rolled around, she saw an opportunity. "All I wanted was to have my friends and family around me. I am surrounded by amazing people and don't want for anything, so I realized the birthday could be my marathon. I'm a school psychologist, and Boston Children's supports the kids I work with every day, so I wanted to support the hospital." In lieu of gifts, Abigail asked friends and family to make donations to the hospital—raising $1,135 to help our patients. Above, Abigail at her party, third from left.

Fueling discoveries

Neuroscientists at Boston Children's Hospital have an ambitious goal: to unravel how the brain works at its most basic level. The F.M. Kirby Foundation understands that basic science is the bedrock for breakthroughs in autism, epilepsy, Parkinson's and so many other illnesses. It's why the Foundation has generously donated $10.8 million since 1997 to the hospital's neuroscience program, named The F.M. Kirby Neurobiology Center, in recognition of the Foundation's philanthropic partnership. That generosity, including a recent gift in 2012, helps the hospital recruit star talent, arms researchers with essential tools and fuels innovation. "Boston Children's is known worldwide for unparalleled patient care," said S. Dillard Kirby, president of the F.M. Kirby Foundation, above, "but its research—notably the neuroscience program—is the envy of most other institutions. We're honored to help them lead the way."

The annual report on philanthropy is published by Boston Children's Hospital Trust, recognizing outright gifts of cash, securities and property of $1,000 or more in calendar year 2012. We strive for accuracy in this report. If you prefer your listing be other than what appears in this publication, please contact: Katherine Cronin: 857.218.3130 or Katherine.cronin@chtrust.org.
